This special issue is not a proceedings volume, but the ground for it was prepared by the Center for the Study of War and Memory’s 2017 conference, “France and the Memory of the Great War,” at which the majority of the articles here were first presented. I wish to thank Annette Becker for her thought-provoking keynote address and her extraordinary generosity throughout the conference. I also wish to recognize the sponsors of that conference: the Consulat de France, the University of South Alabama College of Arts and Sciences, Phi Kappa Phi, the Department of History, the Department of English, and the Department of Modern and Classical Languages and Literature. My thanks to Cameron Graham for editorial assistance. I am also grateful to Corry Cropper and the Editorial Board of Lingua Romana for supporting this publication.

The Center for the Study of War and Memory at the University of South Alabama is an official commemorative partner of the United States World War One Centennial Commission and the Mission Centenaire 14–18.
